An epidemic of sudden deaths seems to have visited the city. Within the past thirty-six /hours, two other mon, onto wilities and one black, have been found lifeless in bed, and a third instance is that of Bolies, the alleged millionaire, whose case has exetted so much interest in the city. There is absolutely nothing mysterious or cospicious about the three deaths, but the coincidence of their occurrence is rather singular.

About noon yesterday R. T. Harper, a blacksmith, employed at Ainsile's carriage factory, was found dead in his bed in a room over Hallisan's saloon. No. 1801 East Main Street. The man was seen alive about 6:39 o'clock the morning before, lwher he complained of dizzness. He retired, and when the chambermaid visited the room at noon yesterday abe found him lying in the bed, stiff and dead Death was due to apoplexy. Harper was about forty-four years, of; age, and was unamirfed.

The case of Bollos is as interesting as ever. The coroner says there is absolutely nothing suspicious about the relorted millionaire's death. He died from natural causes, and there is no occasion whosoever for any further investigation. Mr. Sargent and Dr. Taylor had a consultation yesterday, and the supposed heir of Bolles told what he had said publicly before—that the dead man was wealthy, and that he left his fortune to him (Sargent). The interview was entirely satisfactory. Dr. Taylor advised Mr. Sargent to apply to Judge Witt for an administrator for the estate, and he said he would take some such step.

WHAT COL. W. J. WALLACE SAYS:

"The War of the Rebellion, in which I was at the front from '61 to '65, left me with Impaired health and a broken down nervous system. I tried doctors, medicines and change of scene and climate, but all to no purpose. Hearing what your Paw-Paw did for others I thought I would try it, and did so, also using your Paw-Paw Pills, and I tell you the results are marvelous when you consider that I am 78 yoars old. I have taken three bottles of the Paw-Paw and one of the pills, and I almost feel that I have found the fountain of perpetual youth. I therefore urge everyold soldier or other person who has stomach or nerve trouble to get Paw-Paw, as I know It will benefit them Immensely."

But the troubles of the General, instead of being at an end, were really just beginning. He shook hands with Mrs. Surratt. She was at first arrested simply because a man named Payne, and the life of Socrotary Seward had lived at her house. Payne said he came from Fauquier county, and this was enough to but General Payne under suspicion to time, and was then sent to Johnson's Island, where he was kept in close confinement until the first week in June, when he was released "upon the same terms granted Robert E. His Devotion to Virginia.

At the close of the war General Payne set to work to mend his broken fortunes. He succeeded well, and he leaves a considerable estate.

General Payne is survived by six children and his wife, who was a Miss Payne. Ten children were born to them; four are dead. His sons are Captain William Winter Payne, of Harrisonburg; Arthur M. Payne, of this city; Harry F. Payne, of Kansas City; Winston Payne, of Memphis, and Virginia Payne, who is the wife of Mr. Eppa Hunton, Jr., of Richmond.

His DEVOTION TO VIRGINIA.

This sketch would be incomplete without some more special reference to General Payne's love of Virginia. Virginians have been noted in all generations of the history of the old Commonwealth for their devotion to their State. With General Payne this love was a passion. He loved Virginia as a man loves his bride, and to the day of his death was as willing to the day develor his fortune and his honor for her welfare and her honor as he was in the days when he rode with Stuart. The Virginia of to-day, her, peoplo and her hitting were as dear; to him as was that Virginia of forty years ago, wrapped in the fine of hattle and trembling beneath the tread of contending armies. He was a solder because his State needed his sword. He was - Virginian first of all, a southron afterwards. A short time before his death he said to a dear friend: "I have never heen a politican, but I am as true a Confederate this day as I was when I rode from Warrenton to Manassas in 180. I have never ceased the sought any favors for myself. I think that the greatest calemity that has ever befallen my country was the wreck of the Confederacy."

Attend the Funeral.

The news of the death of General Payne, though, not unexpected, caused universal sorrow here. He was quite well known in Richmond and everybody who knew him leved him. Every Confederate had a tribute to pay to his devotion, courage and gallantry as a soldier and to his lofty character as a man.

Rov. Dr. James F. Smith, commander of Lee Camp, received a telegram advising him of General Payne's death, and Comrades David A. Brown, Jr., George L. Christian, James E. Phillips, O. B. Morgan, James T. Gray, Ellyson W. Martin, D. Hardy Pyle and Thomas Ellett were appointed a detail from Lee Camp to attend the funeral. They are requested to call at the office of Captain Brown, No. 726 East Main Street, to-day and arrange for the trip.

General Payne had been a member of the board of visitors of Lee Camp Soldiers' Home for many years, and was for some years president of the Virginia division of the Army of Northern Virginia. General Payne entered the Arguman Military Institute in 1847. He is recorded as having graduated with his class, but he often told of how he and a number of other young fellows left the institution at the request of the superintendant before the completion of the superintendant before the completion of the regulations. The board of visitors offered to take the cadets back after a short time, but the general had fallen in love in the meantime, and determined to go to the University of Virginia and make a lawyer of himself. After the war the board of visitors, in view of the distinguished career of General Payne and General James Walker, another of the expelled cadets, had diplomas sent them and caused their names to be enrolled among the list of graduates. Successful in His Profession.

Successful in His Profession.

After graduating in law at the University, General Payne was admitted to the bar in Warrenton in 1851, and was elected Commonwealth's attorney of Fauquier county about 1855, defeating Mr. Robert E. Scott, who was the leader of the Whig party in Virginia. General Payne held the office up to the time of the war and through the reconstruction period, when he surrendered it. Since the war General Payne had been almost continuously engaged in the practice of his profession. About two years ago he retired, and since that time had spent much of his time in this city, and a few weeks ago went to Florida in the hope of recovering his rapidly falling strength. But the journey did him more harm than good, and his condition when he returned to Washington, was worse than when he went away. He continued to fall rapidly until death came. General Payne was counsel for the old Virginia Midland Railway and its successor (the Southern) for thirty years. He was recognized as one of the ablest lawyers of this country.

General Payne was never a politician, not that he did not take a lively interest in public affairs, but he was in no sense an office seeker. He was a member of the Democratic State convention which sat in Richmond on August 11, 1877, and his speech nominating General Fitzhugh Lee to the governorship, was a gene of Impasioned oratory. He was a member of the Legislature of 1851-81, but he entered politics then as he had entered the army (wenty, years before—from the conviction that it was the duty of every man to rush to the aid of the State, which was then about to be delivered into the hands of Mahone. The latter was elected to the United States Senate by that Legislature.

Prepared for the War.

Though eminent as a lawyer, it is as a solder that General Payne will be chiefly location and the profession who was a sense of the solder that General Payne will be chiefly location that General Payne will be chiefly location that General Payne will be chiefly location that General Payne will
